

Spring Forward

Ready for the Test.
Ready for Life.

It's almost time for your child to take the annual state test in math and English language arts. To see what's expected of your child, check out the practice test and how it measures real-world skills.

Visit belearninghero.org to get your state's practice test, plus other simple ways to help your child feel confident and ready for the test.

What do you need to know about the test?

It's about the big picture.

Along with grades and classroom work, the state test is another measure of how well your child is progressing in grade-level math and English. Even if your child gets good grades, check out the state test results to see how well your child understands specific concepts needed to be ready for the next grade.

The what, when, and how.

Ask your child's teacher about details such as: How long does the test take? When will my child be taking the test in each subject? When and how will I get the results?

How to use the score report.

Last year's state test results can help you and the teacher understand where your child may still need extra support and where progress has been made this year.

Bring on the challenge!

We know tests can be nerve-racking but you can boost your child's self-confidence by showing him or her how to take on challenges with a positive attitude and determination. Remind your child to take their time and just try their best.